

Australian taxpayers are giving big miners a huge discount on their fuel.

Here's something to think about as you fill up your car:

Wealthy mining companies pay 32c per litre less for their fuel than the rest of us do.

How is this discount paid for? Through your taxes. And it doesn't come cheap. This fuel discount to the mining industry costs the taxpayer nearly $2 billion each year.

If you think that's unfair and Aussies' tax dollars should be spent on more important things than giving big mining a big handout, you can do something about it.

HELP END POLLUTER HANDOUTS AT PAIDTOPOLLUTE.ORG.AU

The Paid to Pollute campaign is calling for billions of dollars of taxpayer-funded handouts to big polluters to be redirected to programs that build a better Australia.

Instead of giving $2 billion of Australians' taxes to the mining industry so they can have cheaper diesel fuel, Australia can put the budget back into surplus, fund better education for our kids or increase health services.

We need your help to make this happen.

The budget will be handed down on the 14th of May and every voice counts. We need as many people as possible telling Treasurer Wayne Swan to stop giving away our taxes to the wealthy multinational mining industry and instead use that money to build a better Australia.
